About Syncrovax

The Syncrovax platform is being developed to synchronize the timing and location of tumor antigen release with the functional activation of immune cells. Syncrovax utilizes a combination approach of tumor lysis and intratumoral immunotherapy delivery. The treatment is intended to change the tumor microenvironment from immunosuppressive to immunostimulatory by activating the innate and adaptive immune responses and potentially increasing T cell functions. The immune responses triggered are intended to enable an anti-cancer response that is expected to act at the site of the treated tumor as well as in metastases throughout the body.
